Wife Locks Pump, But Judge Rules Farmer Can Water Nags

William Leipstorff, 66 years old, now has permission to water his horses from his farm pump as long as he carries or pipes the water from the well to the barn. Judge Sabath of Cook County on Monday ordered Mrs. Martha Leipstorff, his estranged wife, not to lock their pump and to allow her husband to water his thirsty nag, so long as he behaves himself, on their farm near Worth.

The pump, midway between the farmhouse and the barn, has been the center of a bitter controversy in the Leipstorff family. Ten years ago Mrs. Leipstorff obtained a separate maintenance order, and in 1925 a quarrel over the hay barn and out-houses resulted in the court's order dividing the property and enjoining the husband and wife from annoying one another.

But recently Mrs. Leipstorff padlocked the pump, making him walk a mile or so to water his horses, so Leipstorff applied for an injunction. Saturday Mrs. Leipstorff filed suit for divorce, charging habitual drunkenness. He, she alleges, has been in the habit of keeping his moonshine in the well.

Judge Sabath pleaded for a reconciliation. They have five grown children; have been married for more than forty years.

"No, never. He drinks too much," sobbed Mrs. Leipstorff. "Drinks too much! Here he is fighting for water and you lock the pump," said the judge.

Leipstorff was asked if he drank. He grinned, shaking his head. "This country is dry, your honor. This man doesn't drink," pleaded his lawyer, Archie Coburn.

"I won't go back to her judge. Since our trouble ten years ago four of my children haven't spoken to me," said Leipstorff.

He was advised by Judge Sabath not to turn his nose loose again in the farmyard so Mrs. Leipstorff will be afraid to go into her garden.

AIRPLANE FALLS IN OAK LAWN ST.

Plunging in a spiral nose dive when the motor stalled in their antiquated war-time plane, two air-men crashed in a street at Oak Lawn Monday. One was killed instantly and the other injured so seriously his death was momentarily expected. The plane was almost demolished.

The aviator killed was William Ferkin, 6323 South Troy street. His companion Wm. Doering, same address, lapsed into unconsciousness a moment after he was pulled from the wreckage. He was taken to the St. Francis hospital at Blue Island.

The machine was a Lincoln-Paige two-seater open biplane of the war time "Jenny" type. The air men encountered some difficulty in taking off from Ashburn field, witnesses said.

Both men were pilots but had not yet been licensed, they were said to have had the necessary hours in the air.

The ship was slowly cruising directly over Oak Lawn at a height of about 300 feet when the propeller almost stopped whirling and the plane started flut-ting down.

Witnesses saw it falling and Doering desperately trying to right it and find a suitable landing place.

They had dropped about 200 feet when the plane suddenly turned over and came swirling down nose first. It struck in a three foot ditch near the home of I. N. Behrend, cashier of the Oak Lawn bank.

Both airmen were still held fast by the life belts fastened to the cockpit gunwales when Chief of Police John Cleveland and neighbors arrived, cut them loose and took them from the wreckage.

Wm. Bromond In Assessor's Race

Wm. Bromond of Oak Forest is making a strenuous campaign for the office of assessor of Bremen township. He is a candidate on the Peoples Independent Ticket. Mr. Bromond has been connected with the Cook county Infirmary at Oak Forest for the past 14 years. He stands for a square deal to all his constituents at all times. Election is next Tuesday, April 2nd. Polls will be open from 6 a. m. to 4 p. m.

Oldest Confirmand Presented Boquet

For the first time in the history of the St. John Evangelical church of Mokena the confirmation re-union services were more than a success, in fact they exceeded the fondest hopes of the pastor, Rev. W. J. Cramer who had worked diligently to get all members possible of former classes to attend the services or send greetings. Rev. Mr. Cramer secured the co-operation of the various chairman of former confirmation classes in inviting the members of these classes.

The large edifice was thronged to capacity Sunday night when the re-union services opened. Members were present of confirmation classes of fifty years ago and longer. It was interesting to hear the history of each class and of its members, but often there was a feeling of sadness when the names were read of members who had passed on to the Beyond, some many years ago, some only recently.

A number of the classes of later years were present with 100 per cent attendance. Charles Hirsch was one of the oldest members, being a member of the class of 1871. Mrs. Elizabeth Cappel was the oldest confirmand present and was presented with a beautiful bouquet of roses at the close of the services.

The classes represented were confirmed by Rev. Meyer, Rev. C. Schaub, Rev. G. H. Sieveking, Rev. Boshold, Rev. Wm. Kreis and Rev. W. J. Cramer.

The largest number of members of a single confirmation class was twenty members and the smallest class consisted of one member. The size of the classes fluctuated from year to year, the history of the church shows.

The classes having 100 per cent attendance were presented with boxes of candy.

The Town Doctor

SAYS

HOW DO LITTLE BIRDS KNOW WHEN "IT AIN'T GONNA RAIN NO MORE?"

One day last summer I sat out on the lake front watching the play of both young and old, when a storm came up.

The wind blew out and the people flew in and the rain came down in torrents. Lightning flicked wickedly over the water and the waves rolled to shore with adornment.

It was very apparent where the people went. I did not note where hid the birds, but this I saw: the flies we all so detest, and other such living flying things, took refuge under the visor of my windshield. They were not blown there, for the wind was in the opposite direction—they came there.

Then the birds came out, and immediately it stopped raining.

Who told the birds that the rain would cease—that guided the flies to an automobile?

Call it God—nature if you like—or instinct may suit your pleasure; but call what you may, who can sit at the water's edge in a raging storm watching man and bird and insect and say there is no great Master Mind? Where is the man who thinks his powers of such import that he can match the gift that tells a little bird that "It ain't gonna rain no more?"

Country man, go to the city, city man go to the wide open spaces, and there learn your insignificance. As big as you think you are, the greater man you'll be when you recognize your littleness by comparison.

Given Lodging; Steals Siren

A weary knight of the road came into Frankfort late Tuesday night and sought shelter and a place to slumber. The city dads out of the goodness of their hearts took compassion on the wanderer and turned over the village hall and fire department room to their guest and bid him make himself at home.

Wednesday morning when the city fathers went to see how their guest had spent the night they were astounded to find that their erstwhile guest had paid back his benefactors in a very ungrateful manner by way of disappearing during the night and taking with him the fire siren of the village chemical fire truck. He had access to the motor truck and deliberately screwed the siren and deliberately stole it. This surely was crass ingratitude for the privilege of having the liberty of the village bastille and city hall.

Later in the day section men on the Michigan Central railroad found the fire siren lying on the right of way about 2 miles west of Frankfort. The siren was not damaged.

Bert Fulton Sells Farm to Elmore

Bert Fulton has sold his farm at the north edge of Tinley Park to the Elmore Realty Co., of Chicago who will subdivide the property at once. The consideration has not been disclosed but is said to have been around $500 per acre. Mr. Fulton will hold an auction sale on Saturday, April 6. It is reported Jacob Funk has sold some vacant property to the Elmore company who are also reported as holding an option on the forty acres of John C. Andres.

White Store Buys Out Orland Store

The widely known White Store of Joliet has purchased the entire stock of the Philip E. Steffen clothing and shoe store of Orland Park. The deal was closed last week and the goods were removed to the White Store in Joliet where they will be put on special sale later.

Mr. Steffen has been operating the local store for the past five years. He started a closing out sale in February and finally disposed of his large stock of goods to the Joliet store.

store and started to run down the track with the other boys following.

When officer Smith gave chase the boys left the tracks and ran up the street running north by the V. Scheer place. Officer Smith jumped in his car and headed the boys off and arrested them assisted by Selby Hirsch. The boys were locked up and later searched. They had a few packages of cigarettes, some change and a key. They said they were from Harvey and gave the following names: Christ Ansty, Nathaniel Wheeler, Wm. Lassen, Charles Desvignes and Frank Puglasic. The boys said they worked in a shoe shining parlor in Harvey and one of the boys said: "this is my first time in jail and my last time."

An Open Letter To The Editor

Editor News-Bulletin:

I observe in your paper that John T. Clyne is imbued with a feeling of gratification because of the fact that a certain Will County Board committee is, up to date charged only with being a group of dumb bells instead of something much worse.

If Mr. Clyne can find any gratification in the knowledge that the taxpayers of this county must dig into their pockets and replace a lot of money apparently lost to us by that committee on highways thru their ignorance or thru holes in their pockets, he is welcome to my share in such a good feeling.

In looking over my 1929 tax bills, I find that the county tax rate has been increased from 48 cents per $100 to 63 cents also that another increase of 3 cents has been added for a proposed Forest Preserve, tho no land had been purchased for such purpose.

Delving into county records in an effort to find out why this extra money is needed, one learns a lot of things, some with a queer smell. It is a surprise to find that many committee members, tho they may be too dumb to stand off city slickers who may come out from Chicago with their arms full of nice shiny gold bricks, are not so dumb after all.

Let any tax payer who has been led to believe that our board of supervisors is composed of a group of ignorant or inefficient men, just take a look at the personal expense accounts which some of those fellows turned in for collection.

If anyone thinks that the committee on roads were not efficient, let him get the totals of per diem and expense monies which those men pocketed.

Let Mr. Tax Payer try to figure out, for example, what service the Forest Preserve Committee rendered in order to entitle them to so much money.

Did they buy any land with that munificent appropriation, said to be around $2,500?

I am told that very few Will County tax payers ever take the necessary time and trouble to visit our County Board room. They kick like blazes when county taxes are raised, but when election time comes around the men who have made the worst records sometimes get the majority of votes cast.

It would be a mighty good thing Mr. Editor, if a committee of tax payers, perhaps one from each township, could be formed who would take the trouble to investigate some of the appropriation bills which come before our supervisors.

The same men or the same class of men who handled the sale of those road bonds which we so obligingly placed in their hands; the same class of men who made such an expensive mess in securing the right of way for State Highway Route 51 in this county, will doubtless be selected to spend that $1,750,000 bond issue money for us.

Does this prospect inspire any tax payer with gratification?

The only chance left for the residents of the home districts to share in Mr. Clyne's gratification is for us to find men who are big enough to handle big business as it comes along, then see that those men are elected.

In the meantime let us give all the encouragement we can to Col. Fred Bennitt and others in their efforts to salvage something from that road bond interest money.

In 1866 she was united in marriage with George Treir, Rev. Meyers performing the ceremony. This happy union was blessed with three children, but it was only of a brief duration. Mr. Treir was a civil war veteran and had been seriously wounded and never fully recovered from the effect of the wound. He died December 7, 1871.

In 1872 she was united in marriage with John Sutter, the marriage being performed by Rev. Schenut of the St. John Evangelical church. This union was blessed with one child.

Mr. Sutter was engaged in the general store business in Mokena for many years and also served as postmaster. He died Sept. 22, 1917.

Mrs. Sutter is survived by one daughter, Mrs. Elizabeth Bock of Manhattan, five grand children and four great-grand children, two sisters, Mrs. Henry Meyers and Mrs. Herman Seber both of Chicago, one brother Theodore Biallis also of Chicago and many other relatives and friends.

Funeral services were held Tuesday afternoon from the late home in Mokena to the St. John Evangelical church. Burial in St. John cemetery. Rev. W. J. Cramer officiated. The deceased attained the age of 79 years, 10 months and 17 days.

There are 89 unpaid 1929 auto licenses due now. The village dads say they mean business now.

Something Reminded Her of Her Duty

"Today I am reminded of a duty that I have neglected, and that is to let you know how wonderful have been the results I obtained from the use of Milks Emulsion. Nothing could have been more beneficial to me than your Emulsion."

"In the winter of 1917 and 1918 I had a severe case of pneumonia, and in the spring of 1919 I took a cough. I was doing some summer work to prepare myself for a college, but by the time school opened I was too ill to attend. I finally went to bed for the rest cure. I gained a little in strength and got up by Christmas, but my cough never left me, and I caught cold very easily and it would take a month to get over it."

"Finally, in September, 1920, I got a bottle of Milks Emulsion and wrote you for instructions, to which you replied promptly and for which I thank you. I followed the instructions carefully and soon my cough began to disappear. I was able to sleep better than ever before and my appetite was fierce. I could not eat enough. I gained in weight slowly but surely, but continued the use of Milks Emulsion, until I am a well girl today."

"I went through the entire season without a cold or a cough, and I came back into the society circle and played all the big affairs without any ill effects. About a month ago I neglected myself and took a dreadful summer cold and, being at a house party, I could not care for myself properly. But as soon as I reached home I flew in on my old standby, Milks Emulsion, and within a week I was well."

"I have recommended it to many and if at any time I can be of any help to your company by telling what it did for me, let me know. Sincerely, MISS KATY WALKER, 401 Argyle Ave., San Antonio, Tex."

Saves Time, Too

Little Gene and his sister were preparing for bed. Eva had said her prayers but Gene refused steadfastly to do so. After gentle persuasion his mother gave it up and said: "All right, Eugene, if you want to be a bad boy and not say your prayers, it's all right with me. But tonight when you and sister are asleep sister will have a guardian angel to watch over her and you will not."

"I don't care," Gene replied. "Sister's angel can watch over me, too."

Easter

Silently, yet swiftly,
The pulsing breath of spring
Is lending life and beauty
To every living thing;
Opening bud and blossom
Along each walk and way,
Spreading gladness and delight
To greet the Easter day.

Tinting skies with sapphire,
Streams with silver bright,
Sending little winds abroad
Through the day and night,
Coaxing fragrant blossoms
From the bursting sod,
Crying out a welcome
To the risen God.

Prompting feathered songsters
On each leafy bough
To herald out the tidings:
"Spring is with us now!
Let your hearts be happy,
Throw all cares away,
Join in nature's symphony
On this Easter day."

Real Lesson of the Empty Tomb in Paul's Words

The Easter thought is thus phrased by St. Paul: "If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, not on things on the earth. Mortify therefore your members which are upon the earth; fornication, uncleanness, inordinate affection, evil concupiscence, and covetousness, which is idolatry; for which things' sake the wrath of God cometh in the children of disobedience: in the which ye also walked some time, when ye lived in them." Men have thought and preached so much about the empty tomb, in their effort to prove the resurrection as to have entirely overlooked the question asked by the angel of the resurrection. "Why seek ye the living among the dead?" That has been what many have been doing for twenty centuries, and are still doing. There were those whom the empty tomb did not convince—the women thought the body had been stolen. It is indeed written of one of the disciples that, when he entered the tomb, "he saw and believed."

Of St. Peter it is written: "Then arose Peter, and ran into the sepulcher: and stooping down, he beheld the linen clothes laid by themselves, and departed, wondering in himself at that which was come to pass"—plainly he was not convinced, but bewildered. What did convince His disciples was communion with Him, a renewal of the old association and fellowship, the happy consciousness of His presence which they knew would be an abiding one, and the tender words that He spoke to them. Then it was that they knew He was alive, alive forevermore, and realized that they were called to follow a living and not a dead Leader. They saw that "in Him was life; and the light was the life of men." Also they realized—and they never lost their grip on the thought—that death and the grave were but the gate opening on a larger, finer, happier and nobler life.

"Because I live, ye shall live also!"

such was the assurance given by Christ to His disciples on the eve of His departure from them. It was the assurance of a life unbroken by death, of continued and uninterrupted fellowship with Himself. Argument on the subject is, and ever has been, for the most part futile. The most that has ever been proved was that there was a moral probability of immortality—and that is much. But for the Christian, Easter is the festival of the life eternal, and he must feel that the assurance of his Master—"Because I live, ye shall live also"—is as truly for him as for those to whom the words were first spoken. Yet comparatively few Christians, it is feared, give much thought to the subject—perhaps because they shrink from the contemplation of death. And that is to be regretted. There are some doctrines held and preached by the churches which ought to be, and in time will be, abandoned, but the doctrine of immortality is not one of them. On the contrary, it should be more and more stressed, for it may be, as it was in the first days of Christianity, a great power in human life. It will be remembered that St. Paul was sure that there was laid up for him "a crown of righteousness." It might be expected that he would have said "a crown of life." But "a crown of righteousness" is a crown of life, for righteousness is itself life. So we are privileged to enter into the joy of another Easter, and once more to think of it as the foretaste of an immortality which is in truth—or may be—a present possession. Arnold puts it well, though perhaps somewhat severely:

No, not the energy of life may be Kept on after the grave, but not begun;
And he who flagged not in the earthly strife,
From strength to strength advancing—only he,
His soul well-knit, and all his battles won,
Mounts, and that hardly, to eternal life.

YOU CAN'T DYE with Good Intentions

You can get results—after a fashion—with any old dye; but to do work you are proud of takes real anilines. That's why we put them in Diamond Dyes. They contain from three to five times more than other dyes on the market! Cost more to make? Surely. But you get them for the same price as other dyes.

Next time you want to dye, try them. See how easy it is to use them. Then compare the results. Note the absence of that re-dyed look; of streaking or spotting. See that they take none of the life out of the cloth. Observe how the colors keep their brilliance through wear and washing. Your dealer will refund your money if you don't agree Diamond Dyes are better dyes.

The white package of Diamond Dyes is the original "all-purpose" dye for any and every kind of material. It will dye or tint silk, wool, cotton, linen, rayon or any mixture of materials. The blue package is a special dye, for silk or wool only. With it you can dye your valuable articles of silk or wool with results equal to the finest professional work. When you buy—remember this. The blue package dyes silk or wool only. The white package will dye every kind of goods, including silk and wool. Your dealer has both packages.

No Cause for Alarm

in Odd Heart Action

If you are kept awake at night by your heart acting strangely, especially upon first lying down, you need not be alarmed. Irregular or extra heartbeats are perfectly normal in a great many cases. In fact, extra beats are a carefully planned act of nature, meant to insure continued beating of the heart, in the opinion of Dr. Hilton J. Raisbeck of New York city. The heart is made up of a great many cells. Each cell is capable of starting the contraction which we know as the heartbeat. Some of the cells commonly set the pace or rate at which the heart beats. Sometimes these change their pace, particularly when a person rests after exercise. If the pacemakers change very quickly a few of the other cells may not be able to keep the pace. Then you are conscious of an extra or irregular beat, Doctor Raisbeck explained. Fear should not be felt at such irregularity and Doctor Raisbeck urged physicians not to frighten their patients by telling them they have irregular hearts.

Hunting Pirate Treasure

While taking submarine pictures for the American Museum of Natural History near the Bahama islands, a few years ago, Vancampen Heilner, Spring Lake, N. J., discovered some old cannon on the seabottom. Efforts to raise them failed because the guns were cemented to the reefs by barnacles. Heilner now has returned to the Bahamas with equipment that will lift the cannon and any other salvage from what is believed is a sunken treasure ship of the pirate, Benjamin Hornigold, which went down near this spot. —Capper's Weekly.

Gun Warned of Fire

Returning from a hunt, Charles Maul, Milford, Del., hung up his gun on the kitchen wall thinking it wasn't loaded, but in this case it was fortunate he was mistaken. That night the family was aroused when they heard the gun go off. A fire had broken out in the kitchen and reaching the gun, discharged it. The fire was put out before it spread further.

Water power projects now under way in Canada will add more than 1,200,000 horse power to the country's total.

Progress!

A characteristic French criticism of American film drama appears in a recent number of L'Europe Nouvelle, Paris. Discussing "White Shadows in the South Seas," the writer concludes with the remark that "although the scenario does not escape a certain sentimentality, at least the story ends otherwise than in a marriage. Here is decided progress." —Kansas City Times.

If Back Hurts Flush Kidneys

Drink Plenty of Water and Take Glass of Salts Before Breakfast Occasionally.

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore, don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys and irritate the entire urinary tract. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salts which helps to remove the body's urinous waste and stimulate them to their normal activity.

The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 500 grains of acid and waste, so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of good water—you can't drink too much; also get from any pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts. Take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help clean and stimulate clogged kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in the system so they are no longer a source of irritation, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to help keep their kidneys clean and active. Try this; also keep up the water drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what became of your kidney trouble and backache.

Tough Pies Luxury to Men at Valley Forge

Maj. Gen. John A. Lejeune, commandant of the United States marine corps, says the toughest pies in all history were the ones occasionally obtained by the soldiers under Washington during that snowy winter they spent in camp at Valley Forge. In proof of this assertion he quoted the following from an old history lying on his desk:

"... While in this starving condition, the country people brought food to the camp. Often the Dutch women were seen riding in, sitting on bags on their horses' back, holding two or three bushels each of apple pies, baked sufficiently hard to be thrown across the room without breaking. These were purchased eagerly, eaten with avidity and considered a great luxury."

"No question about war being what Sherman said it was," added the general.—National Republic.

A New "Mine Host" at the Wayside Inn

Restored Mill near the Inn

By ELMO SCOTT WATSON

HERE'S a new "mine host" at the Wayside Inn, immortalized by Henry Wadsworth Longfellow in a group of poems familiar to most Americans, and he is none other than Henry Ford, millionaire maker of automobiles. The Wayside Inn has stood near South Sudbury, Mass., for more than two hundred years. Curiously enough the Wayside Inn was not its original name at all. That title originated in 1826 when the poet, bound from his home in Cambridge to Albany, N. Y., stopped by the wayside during a change of coach horses at the Red Horse tavern and it so pleased his fancy that he later commemorated it in his "Tale of a Wayside Inn."

The Red Horse tavern was built in 1686 by David Howe. Three other Howes were successive keepers of the tavern, their combined service as "mine host" totalling 174 years. Lyman Howe was the host at the time of Longfellow's visit and it was into his mouth that Longfellow put the words of the poem which begins, "Listen, my children, and you shall hear of the midnight ride of Paul Revere."

In 1890 the last of the Howes died and the tavern furnishings were sold at auction. Ownership of the place passed through various hands, but it continued as an inn down to the present century. How it came into the possession of Henry Ford was told recently by Mrs. Ford herself. Speaking before the Woman's National Farm and Garden association, of which she is president, at South Sudbury, Mrs. Ford gave the "inside story" as follows:

Many funny stories have gone around about our intentions, so I am going to tell you so that at least this group will hear the real truth.

Well, I think we have owned it about five years, perhaps six. Mr. and Mrs. Lemon owned it and ran it as an inn until Mr. Lemon died. Mrs. Lemon carried it on about five years. Then she thought she would sell it and take a little ease.

New Englanders had a great interest in coming to the place and they disliked the idea of its being sold, fearful it might get into the hands of some one who would cheat them out of the privilege of visiting it. When an association, formed by many Boston people with the intention of raising money to buy it, was unsuccessful and a man offered to give Mrs. Lemon her price, Mr. Ford was approached. He was told about the man who intended to add on 60 bedrooms and turn it into a common, ordinary roadhouse and take in everybody and all kinds.

Well, some one, I don't know who it was, said that was going to happen. Mr. Ford said, "We'll buy it and save it." That seemed an easy thing to do, buy it and save it. After we realized we owned it we said, "What will we do with it?" We didn't know one thing about running an inn or hotel of any kind. We thought, "We won't renovate it. We'll keep it in perfect order and keep it as a museum."

Then we began getting letters from these nice New England people who came to it so often, writing, "O, Mr. Ford, I've always been able to ride out to Wayside Inn and have luncheon or dinner."

Mr. Ford is rather easygoing, so he said, "We'll continue that." That meant cooks and managers, all sorts of people, to be here and run it. We were away in Michigan and when people are many miles away it is hard to tell whether the people are carrying it on as we should like to have them. But as long as people wanted it, we did it.

We did think we wouldn't have anybody stay over night, and we should keep all the rooms as show rooms, but we got the same story when New England people heard that.

"O, we want to stay over night," and so we did that. Of course we do have these restrictions. We don't take everybody. Everybody has to be known by some one or have an invitation because there are only four bedrooms on the second floor and two on the third floor; not very desirable because in the summer it is hot up there. We just had to limit to people we know are reliable, people we know will not bring a hip flask or anything like that.

To begin with we found the inn in very bad repair. The basement was full of broken down furniture, the lower floor had to be changed so there would be more room from floor to ceiling and we made it nice and clean. The next job was rewiring it. We were afraid of fire, the wires had been stuck in every which way. We went into the walls and fished those little wires through and put them through, what do you call it, a conduit? It was an awful big piece to do and not many who have seen the house before would know that we did it. We wanted to keep it as old as possible.

People began to come in crowds. We found we couldn't take care of them. One Thanksgiving 500 came to dinner, they began telephoning for reservations early in the morning. We had to do something. He had to have another dining room and just as soon as we started doing that we had to have another kitchen. An old-fashioned sink and stove and oven that would do years ago for a few people won't do for many people. We have to have things up to date and of the best, but people don't see the modern kitchen.

Just as soon as we started enlarging the dining room people said, "The old inn must be making so much money they don't know what to do with it."

It was closed Sundays because we decided the type of people who streamed in were not interested in antiques at all. They merely wanted a place to spend the day. We stopped busses coming out at night because we thought it was inconsiderate to have the persons who had been showing people over the house all day, taxed further by tourists who would come to the Wayside Inn in the daytime.

Interesting as is this "inside story" it does not tell all that the motor manufacturer has done to preserve this shrine for future generations of Americans, for he has spent more than a hundred thousand dollars to build a new link of public highway so that heavy traffic may be diverted from the neighborhood of the inn. He has bought more than 2,500 acres of land surrounding the inn, and across the way from it he has restored the old stone mill over whose wheel the water still pours as it did in the old days when the farmers brought their grain there to be ground. Around a bend of the Boston Post road, which goes past the inn, stands the school house where Mary went, followed by her little lamb. This school house originally stood near Sterling, Mass., but, finding it in a dilapidated condition, Mr. Ford bought it and moved it to a site near the Wayside Inn so that it, too, may be preserved for posterity.

Not the least of the interesting facts about the Wayside Inn of today and its new host has been his unrelenting search for the original furnishings or duplicates in the same period. Over the entrance of the inn swings the sign which tells the passing traveler that this is the Red Horse Inn and which bears the name of its builder, David

Cloth for Africans

Lancashire fabric manufacturers are, many of them, devoting the greater part of their time to the production of cloths for natives in Africa and other countries overseas. One Bolton weaver, I am told, is visited personally by native chiefs from time to time, who bring over the latest color-stripe patterns from the native looms for the manufacturer to imitate. The small native loom produces a "join" in about every five inches of the fabric, and this the Lancashire weaver has to imitate artificially, or his stuff will not be acceptable!—Exchange.

When Food Sours

Lots of folks who think they have 'indigestion' have only an acid condition which could be corrected in five or ten minutes. An effective anti-acid like Phillips Milk of Magnesia soon restores digestion to normal.

Phillips does away with all that sourness and gas right after meals. It prevents the distress so apt to occur two hours after eating. What a pleasant preparation to take! And how good it is for the system! Unlike a burning dose of soda—which is but temporary relief at best—Phillips Milk of Magnesia neutralizes many times its volume in acid.

Next time a hearty meal, or too rich a diet has brought on the least discomfort, try—

CHAPTER VIII—Continued

I popped out from the door and picking up a hide slid it into place, remaining until I had three skins in place. I would have persisted longer had she not run out to upbraid me, scolding like a vixen. Then began the phase of warfare I had been dreading, the sending of fire-arrows. None hit the roof; and while they were preparing more fire I rushed forth and finished one side of the roof.

The girl scolded me as if I had been a wayward child. Her gravity and seriousness became her prettily. The little lecture was interrupted by another flight of burning arrows. This time they had the range and we heard two strike on the roof. Before I knew what she was doing she had stepped out to observe how her scheme was working. I followed and picked her up and carried her inside.

"Anyway, mister, there ain't any arrows on the roof," she told me as I stood her on her feet. "Points couldn't get any hold on them skins. Just slithered off."

Between volleys was the golden time for work. I begged her to keep under cover and went to finish patching the south side. This time the foe was awaiting my appearance and delivered a crashing volley the moment I cleared the door. Some of the lead whistled unwholesomely close. A voice shouted loudly and ten Indians, selected for their fleetness of foot, came racing across the opening. It was grimly significant that they were armed with axes only. They were determined to bring the fight to close quarters. I entered the cabin as the girl began firing from the rear loophole.

"Here they come from all directions! They mean it this time!" she cried.

The attack was persisted in until one brave was backing the door with his ax. It is a peculiar fact that with them at such close quarters none of their number was mortally wounded. Doubtless we were nervous and a bit confused by the attack being pressed on three sides while some of them actually climbed on to the roof and dislodged some of the skins. I have no clear recollection of details. I know we darted from side to side and discharged the two rifles and the muskets. The room was thick with smoke and I recall my fear lest those on the roof should make an opening and jump down upon us.

It was not until they began to fall back that I discovered the girl had been more calm than I, for she had refused to discharge her pistol. I peered from a loophole and saw them running for the woods and not a weapon in the cabin was loaded. One of their number had been hit in the foot and was limping along with two men helping him. Probably he had been hit while climbing onto the roof, his foot coming in range with one of the loopholes as a musket was discharged.

I loaded rapidly to get one of the three men making off together, but the moment I opened the door a warning was shouted from the leader in the woods and the wounded man was dropped in a little hollow. His assistants raced off in different directions. The hollow containing the wounded man was too slight effectually to protect him, and opening the door sufficiently to accommodate my rifle-barrel I would have stirred him up had not the girl thrust her hand over the flint and at the same time pulled me backward. I opened my mouth to rebuke her, but she clapped a hand over my mouth and pointed toward the room. Then pulling my ear down to her lips she whispered: "They didn't quit the roof, mister. I heard a little noise up there."

I nodded and gently closed the door and barred it and cocked my ear. She nudged me as the man on the roof made a faint scraping sound. This was a danger I had never counted upon. To get at the fellow necessitated my leaving the cabin. We began talking to allay any suspicions on his part, and the girl said: "He's moving along to get directly over the door. We must fool him." Bidding her to move about at the rear of the cabin and to keep on talking, I stepped to the door and in the notches cut in the logs, so that one might climb to a crevice under the eaves and scrutinize the opening before opening the door, gently placed my feet and pulled myself up until my eyes were at the crevice. My head was close to the roof and as the girl chattered along I heard the telltale sound of the savage working his way down to the eaves and directly over the door.

As I was about to descend, I was further rewarded, for a moccasined foot dropped down across my narrow range of vision. The Indian was still ting with one foot hanging down from the eaves and waiting for me to leave the cabin, when he would drop down upon me. The roof was formed of sapling-size poles covered with large sections of thick bark, which in turn was held in place by poles running lengthwise at regular intervals. I drew my knife and gently inserted it between two of the poles, then desisted, as at the most I would only prick the fellow and put him on his guard.

Regaining the floor I moved a rough table, which Frazier used for displaying his trade-goods, close to the chimney, and gave the girl an iron prod and directed her to stand on the table and pretend to be making an opening through the roof. She hesitated and asked:

"You're going out?"

"He'll be watching the chimney."

"There may be two of 'em."

I shook my head and held up a finger and directed her to keep talking in a loud voice as she assailed the roof. Then taking the short rifle and loading it I tiptoed to the door and noiselessly removed the bar and waited.

The girl began jabbing the iron rod between two of the poles and calling down to me to mount the table and help her. She made much noise and yet I believed I caught a faint sound from over the door. Lifting the door so it would not sag and scrape the floor, I worked it open wide enough for me to pass out.

"The rod's through the roof!" cried the girl.

At the same time a shout rose from the forest. I darted through the narrow opening and whirled about and raised the rifle. One savage was there and had been on the point of crawling to the ridge-pole to investigate the several inches of iron rod showing through the bark when the yell from the woods had warned him to be on his guard. He must have connected the outcry of his friends with the sudden appearance of the rod, for he was on all fours and staring over his shoulder to where his friends were in hiding.

When he saw me the rifle was at my shoulder. He made a convulsive effort to hurl his ax and roll off the roof, but he was dead before he could throw it.

From the Indians' point of view there should have been but one thing for them to do—return at once with their guns and endeavor to shoot us through the loopholes. Luckily for us, they were not inclined to risk any more of their men. I could hear their leader shouting to them, but if he were exhorting them to charge, they had no heart for it. They renewed the attack with fire-arrows. With loose hides, I patched the bare spots as far as I could reach while the girl looped skins together to go over the ridge-pole. I had ignored their musket fire, but when a small bullet whined close to my head I knew some Indian or Frenchman had arrived on the scene with a rifle, and I lost no time in taking cover.

"That sounds like cannon," said the girl as I closed and made fast the door.

"It was a rifle. We must be more careful."

"I know a rifle when I hear it. That's what I mean, mister."

I listened and heard it. It was thunder beyond any doubt. I opened the door a crack and scanned the heavens. There was no storm in sight.

"It's up the Monongahela, I told her. 'It's so far off I fear we won't get even the skirt of it.'"

We needed much of it; not only to drench the cabin but to cool the air inside. With the door closed and the stout shutter in place over the one small opening that served as a window it was blood-hot in the cabin.

Found Pleasure Only in Business Triumph

The American business man, taking his vacation abroad, is one of the most depressing sights of the Riviera, according to Lloyd Morris, writing in Harper's.

"I recall an American whom I met on the terrace of a restaurant in the hills back of Nice," he says. "His wife had inveigled him into taking a winter holiday; it was so much more smart, she said, than a summer vacation. They had come to the Riviera for the winter. I inquired whether he was enjoying it. 'Enjoying it? H—I, no!' He spat expressively. 'But I'll tell you,' he added, his eyes lighting up, 'back home my factory has just sold a thousand beds. New hotel in Cleveland. Had a wire today.' He stared off into the distance. He didn't see the vineyards in the valley below or the blue Mediterranean, framed by hills. And when he added wistfully,

"The place was so insufferable from smoke and powder fumes and the heat that I risked a chance shot from the forest by removing the shutter and opening the door. The thunder rolled across the sky again and the girl sighed:

"Let's wish it's a smart one and will come this way."

I made her drink some water and with a pewter dish bathed her wrists and slim neck. She complained that I was wasting it, and in the next moment was on the point of weeping as she said no one had been kind to her, except her crippled uncle, since her mother's death. I brushed back her hair and bathed her forehead and washed the smoke and grime from her face and tried to be very gentle with her. I was beginning to realize what a slip of a thing she was to be participating in such grim tragedies. I also appreciated her sturdy spirit.

Suddenly she drew away from me and rearranged her hair and diffidently said:

"You've been master kind to me, mister. I wish I was a witch, like folks in Great Cove say. I'd change you into a horse, or a bird, and you'd get clear of all this."

"Sit here, just inside the door, while I stand watch. I've never had a chance to wait on such a brave little woman before."

"Boo! That's fooling," she scoffed, and eyeing me in surprise. "You've been in big settlements. You've seen women, mebbe, who never see a Injun. All they have to do is be brave. If I had a pair of shoes like what some of them settlement women most likely wear, I'd die fighting to keep 'em."

"If we get out of this, you shall have the gayest pair of shoes to be found in Alexandria," I promised, and I thought of Josephine and her love of luxury and wondered how she would have endured the ordeal of being cornered in a trader's cabin at the mouth of Turtle creek.

"I ain't used to have folks give me things," she gravely told me. "We'll have to think about that." Then shyly: "Is that where you want me to go? To Alexandria, a real big settlement?"

In truth, I had given no thought as to just where she should go did we escape. Yet how could I give her a pair of shoes in Alexandria if she were not there to receive them?

"If I go back there, yes. I have no home there now. Like yourself, I am homeless."

This pleased her and she snuggled against my knee and murmured:

"I'm thinking it's mighty good that you're like that—no home. You can build a home anywhere. All you need is an ax and some trees. If you'd had a home, you'd never have come poking round Great Cove. Lor's love! What would have happened to me if you hadn't come along? At Will's creek, too. And in that other cabin, when I run away. And now here."

"You have nothing to thank me for," I sadly told her. "At all those places you name, you have had trouble because I did go to the cave. Now we'll close the door while I take a look at the woods from the back of the cabin. The Indians are too quiet to suit me."

I bent down to the loophole and immediately called to her to make sure the bar was firmly in place.

"Another fight," she sighed. "And we was having such a talk!"

I heard her reloading her rifle, but did not remove my eye from the hole. Something was slowly approaching the cabin. For a moment I could not make it out, and then glimpsed the top of a feather showing above the strange object. Simultaneously with my discovery, the Indians began firing their guns at the front of the cabin and yelling. I paid no heed to the gunfire and the shouting for the real menace was where the feather bobbed and slowly advanced.

She elbowed me aside and after a glance informed me:

"They've fastened some of the skins together and are holding them in front of them. Wonder if it'll stop a bullet."

I fired my rifle. The moving barricade stopped, and then came on again. The savage, or savages, had difficulty in keeping it in place and their approach was very slow. Exulting cries resounded from the woods as the hidden watchers witnessed how ineffective had been my bullet.

It seemed to be a very long time that I waited, and finally noted how dark the interior of the cabin was growing. Had I not known the position of the sun, I would have said it was later than the twilight hour.

"I can't hardly see you, mister," said the girl uneasily. "You look all humped over like a bear."

Lesson for March 31

THE FUTURE LIFE

LESSON TEXT—Luke 24:1-12; John 14:6.

GOLDEN TEXT—Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life.

PRIMARY TOPIC—The Glad Resurrection Day.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Glad Resurrection Day.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Living Here and Hereafter.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Our Ground of Hope for the Future.

I. The Resurrection of Jesus Christ (Luke 24:1-12).

The supreme test of Christianity is the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead. It matters little what Jesus said and did while alive if His body remained in the grave. If He did not come forth in triumph from the tomb, then all His claims are false.

1. The empty sepulcher (vv. 1-3).

(1) The coming of the women (v. 1). As an expression of affectionate regard for the Master, they came with spices for His body. If they had believed His words, they would have known that His body could not be found in the sepulcher.

(2) What they found (vv. 2, 3). When they came to the sepulcher they found the stone had been rolled away, but they found not the body of Jesus. For them to have found His body in the sepulcher would have been the world's greatest tragedy. The empty tomb spoke most eloquently of the deity and power of the Son of God (Rom. 1:3).

2. The message of the men in shining garments (vv. 4-8).

(1) "Why seek ye the living among the dead?" (v. 5).

This question, uttered by the angels, has been reverberating through the centuries.

(2) "He is not here, but is risen."

Jesus had told them that the Lord must be betrayed and crucified and that on the third day He would rise again. Had they given heed to His words they would have been relieved of their perplexities.

3. The women witnessing to the eleven (vv. 9-11).

Their thrilling testimony concerning the empty tomb and the words of the angels appeared to the apostles as idle tales and they refused to believe.

4. Peter investigating (v. 12).

While the testimony of the women seemed as idle tales, Peter was not of the temperament to dismiss the matter from his mind, therefore he ran unto the sepulcher. Upon investigation he found the linen clothes lying in such a way as to prove the reality of the resurrection.

II. Jesus Preparing a Place in Heaven for His Own (John 14:1-3)

These last words of Jesus were words of comfort. The hopes of the disciples were utterly shattered when Jesus told them about the cross. He consoled them by pointing to the reunion in the heavenly Father's house.

1. He asked them to trust in Him, even as God (v. 1).

Faith in the God-man, Christ Jesus, will steady the heart, no matter how intense the grief, or how great the sorrow.

2. He informed them that He was going to the Father's House in heaven to prepare a home for them (v. 2).

He assured them that there was abundant room there for all. He said, "There were many 'abiding places.' Heaven is an eternal dwelling place for God's children."

3. He assured them that He would come again and escort them to heaven (v. 3).

Jesus will not depend upon nor wait for His own to come to Him, but will come and call forth from the grave those who have died; transforming living believers, and take them all together to be forever with Himself in the heavenly home.

III. Jesus Christ Is the Way to the Heavenly Father (vv. 4-6).

Jesus informed the disciples that they knew the place to which He was going, and the way. To this Thomas interposed a doubt, in answer to which Christ asserted that He is:

1. The Way (v. 6).

Jesus Christ is more than a mere guide to God. He is the way itself.

2. The Truth (v. 6).

He is not merely the teacher, but the Truth incarnate. In His incarnation the spiritual and material worlds were united; therefore every line of truth, whether spiritual or material, converged in Him.

3. The Life (v. 6).

Christ is not merely the giver of life, but He is the very essence of life. Only those who receive Christ have life in the true sense.

The New Testament

The New Testament has done more toward creating a race of noble men and women than all the books of the world put together.—Sir Walter Scott.

Duty and Faith

The descent of duty is ever followed by the ascent of faith.—Dr. J. B. Shaw.

Man is unjust, but God is just; and justice finally triumphs.—Longfellow.
